Hapgood, Norman. George Washington. 1901.....92 W272ha

"Deals mainly with the life of Washington down to his election as President, the years subsequent to 1789 being but briefly surveyed. In general plan and method of treatment the work suggests the 'true biographies'...There is the same copious quotation from letters and journals, the same interesting emphasis upon details, and the same distinctly personal impression as in the well-known biographies by Ford, Curtis, and Fisher...The result is a presentation of Washington on his human side which, while at times somewhat painful to hero-worshippers, happily avoids the belittling manner into which this style of biography easily falls." Nation, 1902.

Lady Hardwicke's husband was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland from 1801 to 1806, and she gives some amusing sketches of Dublin society of that time. Lady Stuart de Rosethay's letters are dated from the English Embassy at Paris, and are rich in reminiscences of men and events. . . Her daughters, Lady Canning and Lady Waterford, belonged to the second quarter of the century. Mr. Hare gives interesting details of their childhood in France and England and of their marriages. Lady Canning's married life was spent in India during the eventful period of the mutiny, her journal being full of the thrilling scenes there enacted. . . Lady Waterford spent her long widowhood among her husband's tenants in Ireland. With many domestic details are anecdotes and recollections of some famous people."

The edition from which this is condensed is chiefly a series of letters and private journals and is (1900) the chief authority on the subject. For 20 years Wilberforce was the leader in and out of Parliament in the movement for the abolition of the slave-trade, and no one was more instrumental in bringing it about.

"One most obvious characteristic of Wilberforce was [his] singular personal attractiveness...His transparent kindness and simplicity made him, like Fox, lovable even to his antagonists...Though some injudicious admirers tried to raise his merits by depreciating the claims of his allies and predecessors in the anti-slavery movement, it may safely be said that there are few heroes of philanthropy whose careers will better stand an impartial investigation." Dictionary of national biography.

"Mr. Harrison has told a clear story of the life of the founder of the Dutch Republic...giving a distinct picture of the very complicated political situation which existed at the epoch of the revolt of the Netherlands...More discriminating in his judgments than Mr. Motley and somewhat less unstinted in his admiration of his hero, Mr. Harrison still gives substantially the same picture of the Dutch statesman as that given by the American historian...Especially value is added to the little volume by complete biographical tables." Critic, 1898.

"It is saying a good deal for Mr. Beers when we add that he has produced...a readable and almost valuable book of memoirs...He has utterly failed to prove—if indeed he ever expected to prove it—that Willis's life was in itself worth writing; but he has shown it amply worth considering as a chapter in American literature." Nation, 1885.

1798; a study of "The prelude." 1897.....92 W897l

"A singularly interesting study of Wordsworth's youth. Of M. Legouis's general qualifications, it need only be said that he has a thorough knowledge of English literature, and a minute acquaintance with all the special literature bearing on Wordsworth's early career...Wordsworth was in France at the crisis of the revolution, and there, as we know from 'the Prelude,' became the enthusiastic admirer of Michel Beaupuy...M. Born in 1856, in the heart of the high Alps, it was not till 1880 that...he determined to devote his life to the mastery of the great mountains. Since then he has made conquest after conquest...Not only in his own Switzerland, but in the Himalayas, in New Zealand, and in the Andes...Will be attractive to many as the first attempt of any guide to give an account of himself and his doings in print, and as containing a record of mountain-adventure that few climbers...could match." Academy, 1900.
